- c) What do the WSIS Stakeholders envision for an information/ knowledge society ensuring that the youth, women, poor, persons with disabilities and indigenous peoples benefit from the enormous opportunities provided by the ICTs?

We all envisage this, the question is how best to achieve it. Discussions should continue in various forums, including ITU, regarding how best to achieve our common goals.

Please note: You may wish to refer to the WSIS Forum 2012 & 2013 Booklet on Identifying Emerging Trends and a Vision Beyond 2015, available at www.wsis.org/review/mpp.

- C1. The role of public governance authorities and all stakeholders in the promotion of ICTs for development
 - This topic needs further discussion, given that there is still no common vision of the proper role of governments. Indeed, that role may vary by country: if so, this should be recognized, while striving to find commonalities.
- C2. Information and communication infrastructure
 - It should be accepted that market solutions will not always result in the rollout of sufficient infrastructure. In some economies, government intervention of some form may be required for some portions of the infrastructure.
- C3. Access to information and knowledge
 - Access should be understood as affordable access, meaning that the price of access should be aligned with a user's disposable income. This is not the case today for Internet access in many developing countries.
- C4. Capacity building

- C5. Building confidence and security in the use of ICTs
 - There should be an international agreement to cooperate on security matters and to avoid unilateral assertions of national laws and to avoid extra-territorial actions. In this context, all countries should accede to the 2012 ITRs and should consider the principles posted at "necessaryandproportionate.org", both when developing or revising national legislations, and as a possible new Resolution or Statement.
